Module 3: RELIGIOUS PLURALISM AND ETHNOGRAPHIC STUDY

Course: SOC6EJ305 – Sociology of Religion • University of Calicut (CUFYUGP 2024)

1. Conceptual Scope, Epistemic Frameworks & Curricular Foundations

The academic investigation of Sociology of Religion, specifically regarding Module 3 (RELIGIOUS PLURALISM AND ETHNOGRAPHIC STUDY), is anchored within the rigorous undergraduate curriculum of Calicut University under the CUFYUGP 2024 regulations. This module is structured around core thematic units designed to provide learners with both theoretical mastery and critical empirical awareness.

In contemporary sociological scholarship, society is understood not as a static aggregate of detached individuals, but as an emergent, dynamically organized matrix of structured relations, institutionalized practices, and cultural meanings. C. Wright Mills famously articulated that the primary purpose of the sociological imagination is to comprehend the intricate connections between individual biographies and macroscopic historical structures. Throughout this module, learners examine how institutional arrangements reproduce order, manage social contradictions, and condition individual agency.

2. Systematic Sociological Examination of Hinduism

The scholarly examination of Hinduism constitutes an indispensable analytical domain within Sociology of Religion. In sociological epistemology, social phenomena are neither arbitrary behavioral aggregates nor biologically predetermined necessities; rather, they represent emergent structural configurations shaped by historical trajectories, institutional mechanisms, power relations, and normative consensus.

When interrogating hinduism, sociologists examine the dynamic interplay between microscopic individual agency and macroscopic structural constraints. Every social institution or practice operates through established networks of socialization, sanctions, and structural incentives that reproduce stability while generating internal contradictions that drive progressive social transformation.

2.1. Theoretical Paradigms and Epistemological Frameworks

Contemporary sociological literature concerning hinduism is characterized by profound theoretical plurality. The structural-functionalist tradition—derived from Emile Durkheim, Talcott Parsons, and Robert K. Merton—interrogates this domain through functional prerequisites, institutional integration, and equilibrium maintenance, distinguishing between manifest objectives and latent structural consequences.

Conversely, critical conflict paradigms and Marxist traditions—elaborated by Karl Marx, Antonio Gramsci, and contemporary critical theorists—unmask how institutional arrangements surrounding hinduism reflect underlying relations of production, class exploitation, and ideological hegemony. Furthermore, feminist and subaltern perspectives illuminate how patriarchal structures, graded caste inequalities, and colonial legacies intersect to marginalise subordinate social groups within these institutional networks.

2.2. Institutional Mechanics and Empirical Realities

From an empirical perspective, the operational mechanics of hinduism must be examined within concrete socio-historical contexts. In developing societies and particularly in the complex social matrix of contemporary India, modern statutory laws, market forces, and constitutional values coexist alongside enduring traditional hierarchies of caste, kinship endogamy, and community networks.

Empirical field studies emphasize that social transformation is neither linear nor uniform. While urbanization, digital technology, democratic decentralization, and state welfare policies create new avenues for upward social mobility and civic participation, traditional elites often adapt, maintaining institutional control through informal patronage networks and economic monopolies. Understanding hinduism therefore requires rigorous empirical methodologies that combine quantitative demographic surveys with in-depth qualitative field ethnography.

2.3. Contemporary Policy Debates and Regional Applications

Within the context of Keralam and the wider Indian subcontinent, the practical implications of hinduism are directly manifested in contemporary policy interventions and grassroots mobilizations. Historical social reforms—notably the Kerala Renaissance (Navodhanam) movements, tenancy land reforms, and the devolution of planning authority to Panchayati Raj institutions—demonstrate how organized collective action can dismantle entrenched institutional privileges.

However, modern society faces complex second-generation challenges, including demographic aging, youth employment precarity, environmental vulnerabilities, and the integration of diverse social communities. Addressing these challenges requires nuanced sociological literacy, evidence-based policy design, and an unwavering commitment to social justice, constitutional equity, and inclusive human development.

3. Systematic Sociological Examination of Islam

The scholarly examination of Islam constitutes an indispensable analytical domain within Sociology of Religion. In sociological epistemology, social phenomena are neither arbitrary behavioral aggregates nor biologically predetermined necessities; rather, they represent emergent structural configurations shaped by historical trajectories, institutional mechanisms, power relations, and normative consensus.

When interrogating islam, sociologists examine the dynamic interplay between microscopic individual agency and macroscopic structural constraints.
